ANNALES 1972

THE COLLEGE OF NEW ROCHELLE
NEW ROCHELLE, NEW YORK

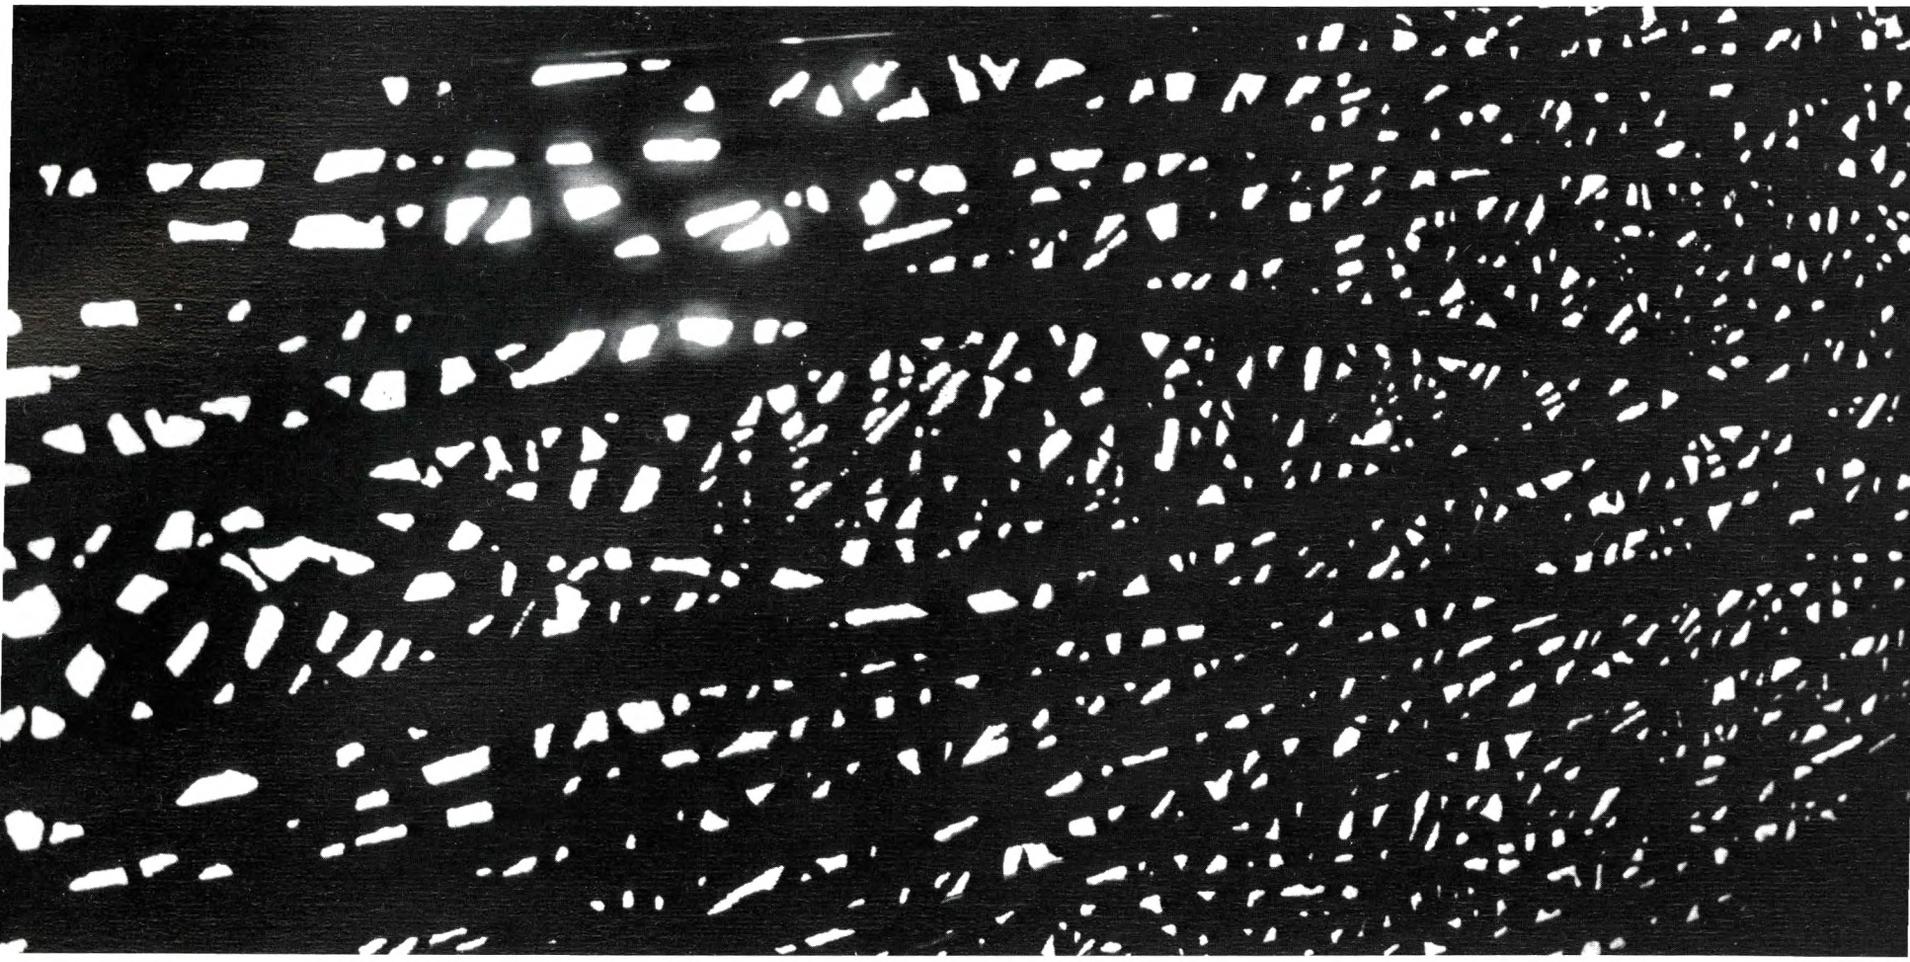

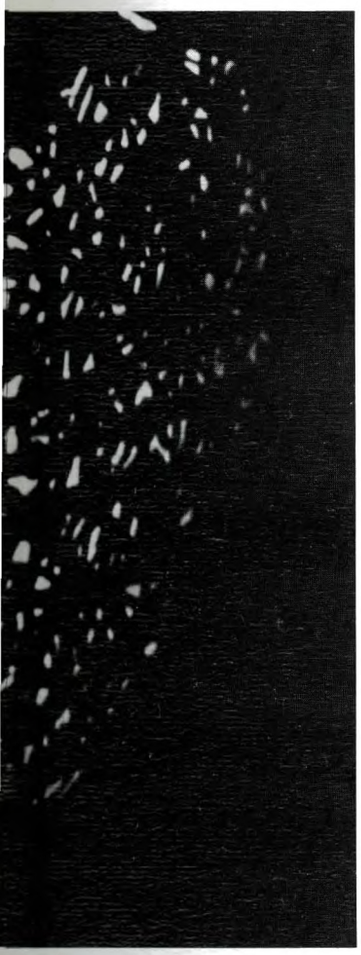

Circular, always circular
Our lives curl, composing
The infinite question.

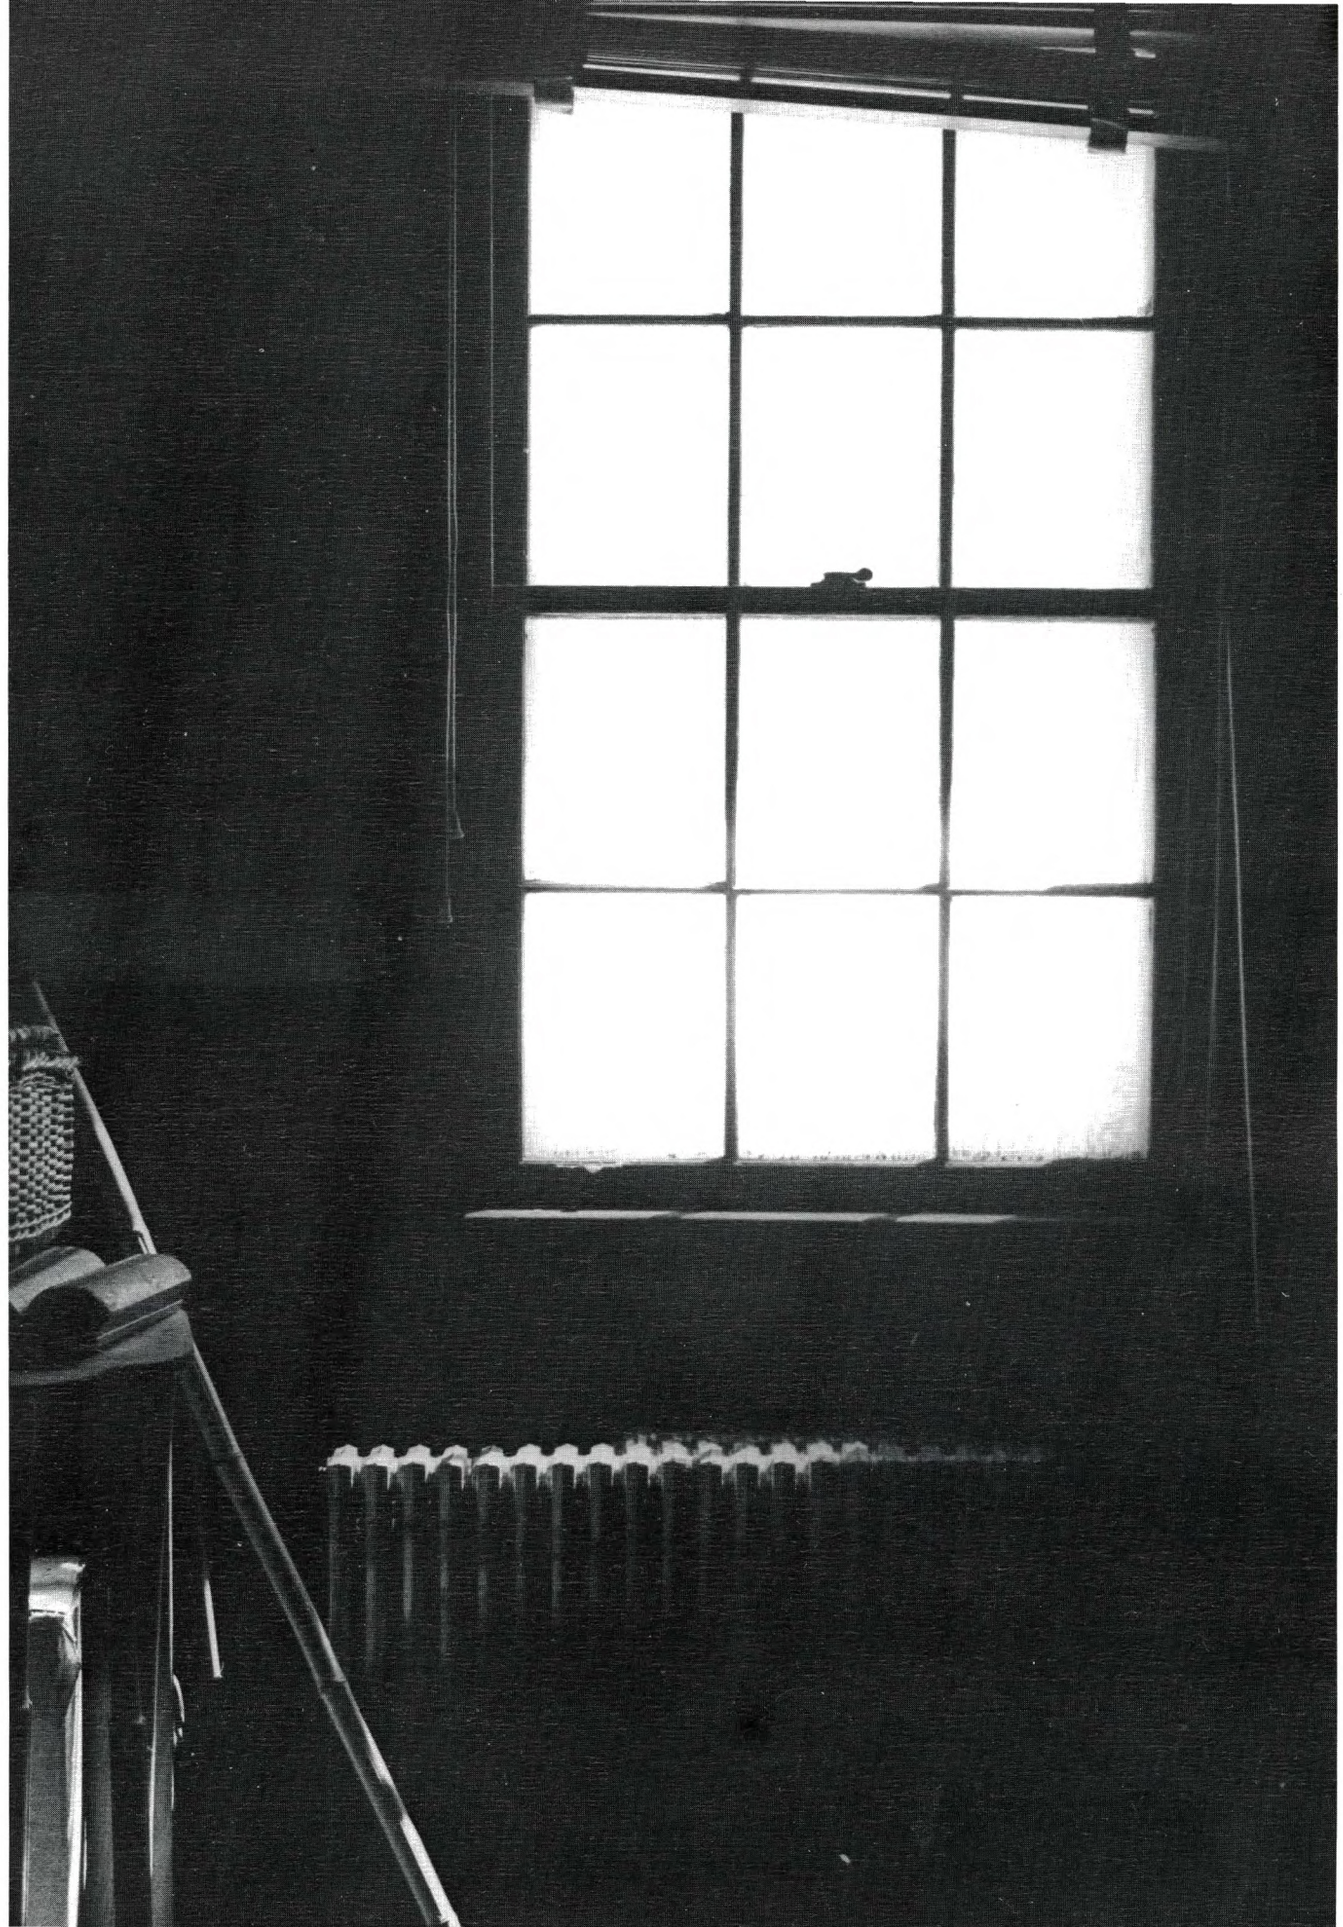

Amid exploding silence
And life's muted rumblings
We search out passage ways.

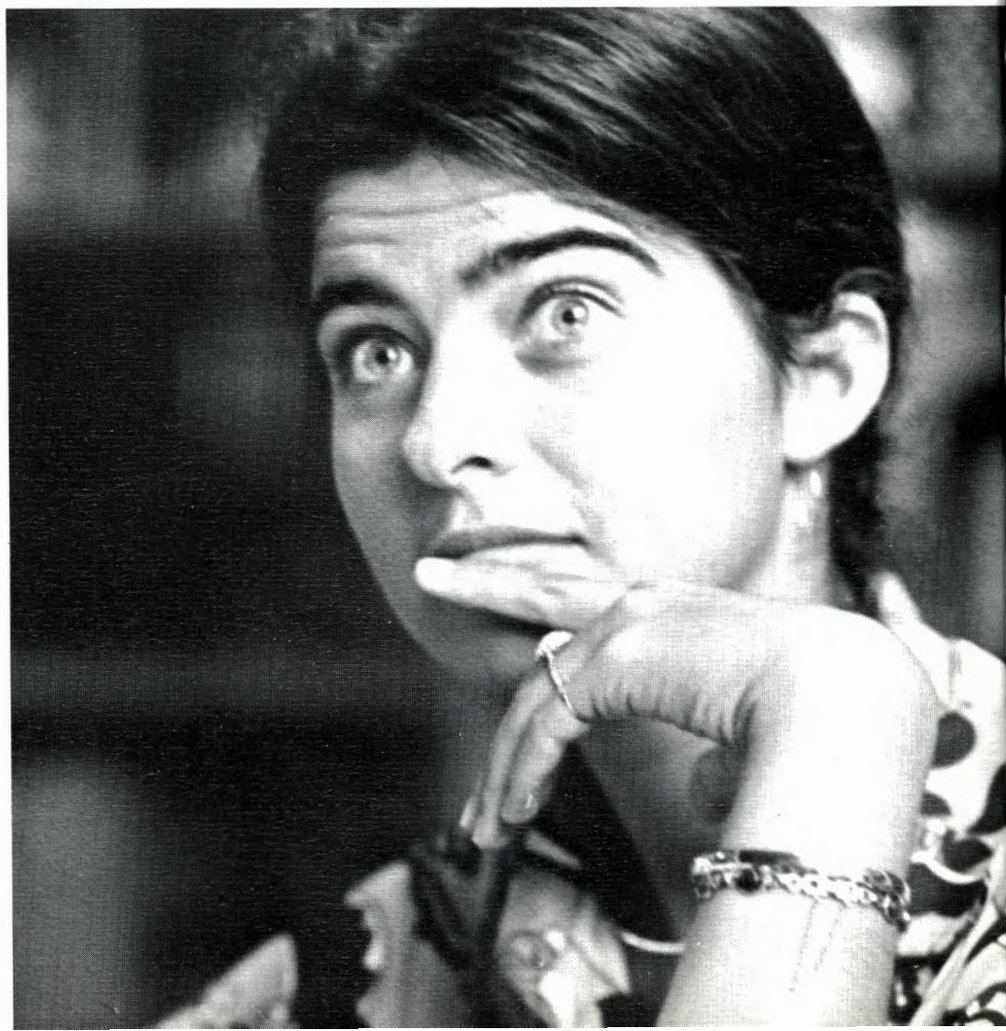

Pin-pricks of light
May smile on us
Sometimes
Like enmeshed fire.
We press a less-cold nose
Against the looking glass.

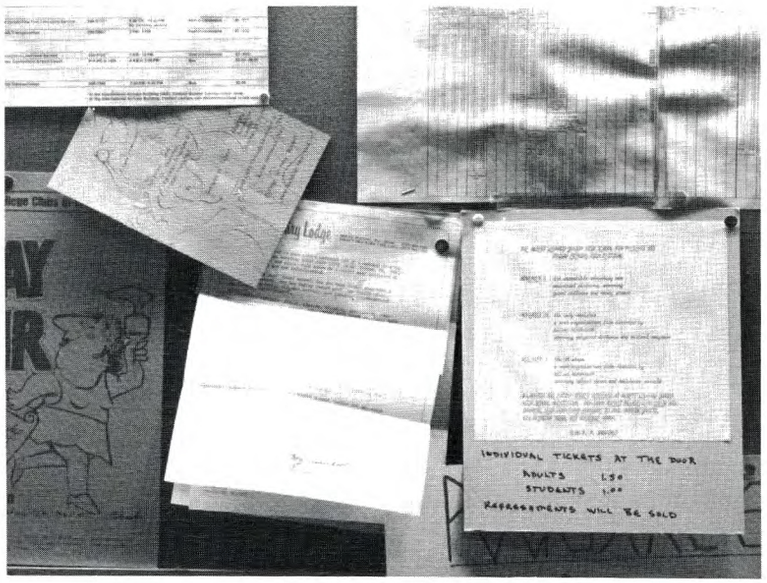

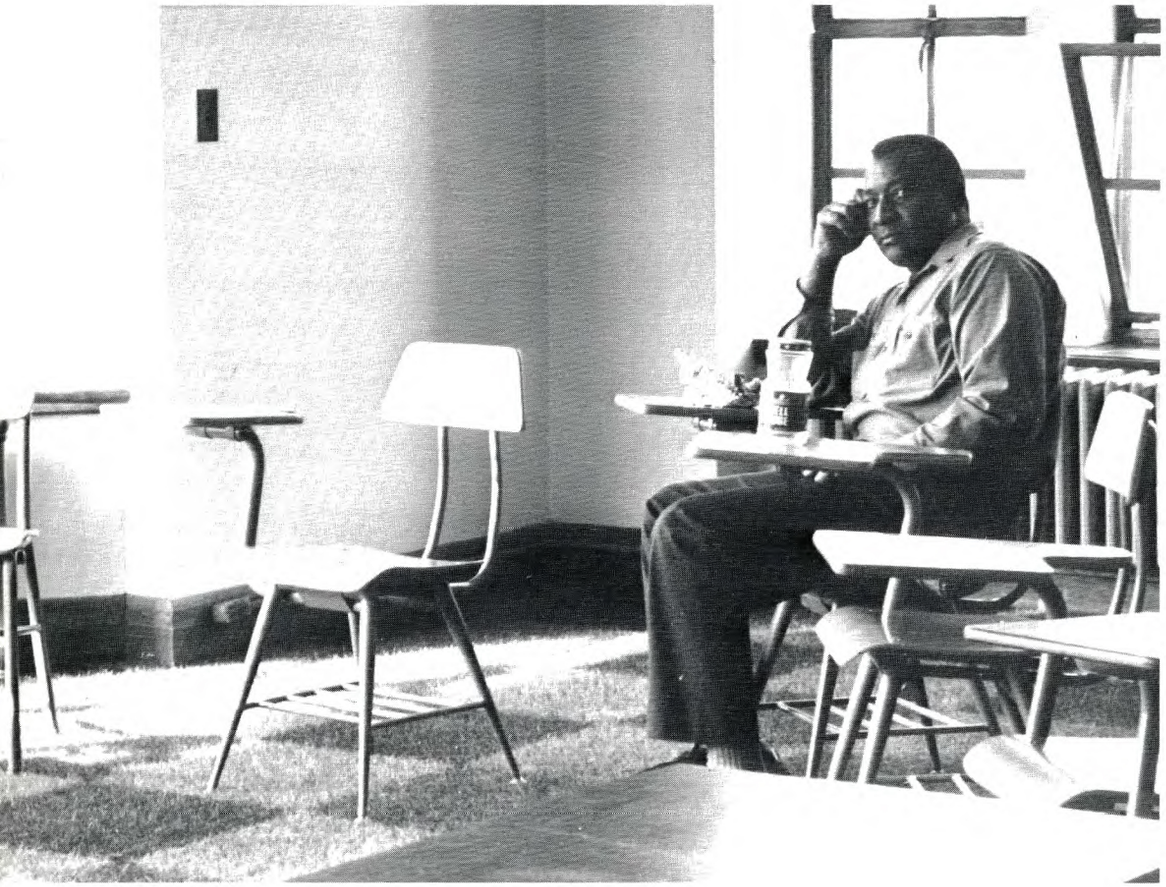

All we may call
Our own
Are those expressions
Of each experience.

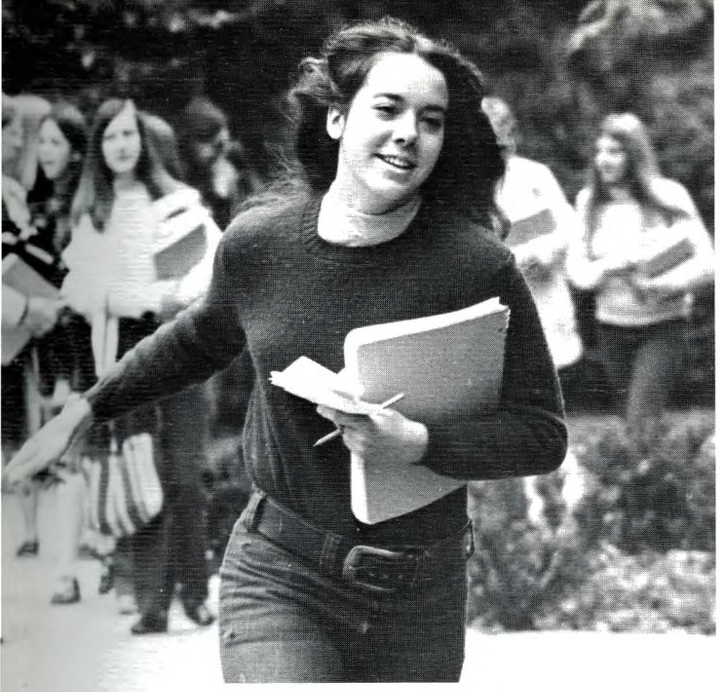

INDIVIDUAL TICKETS AT THE DOOR

As we spin the wheel designs
Between realities
And our patterned dreams,
Teach us in time—
That we too may define
What each together means.

Absurd to hope that people can live
In communal privacy,
Crazy to think they can converse
In sensitive honesty,
Stupid to dream they can dispense
With all formality,
And self-contradictory, certainly,
To imagine that failure succeeds
When you've tried to do more than you can.
(Will we accomplish even a third of what we should
Or shall all our best work really be done
In one simple evening's dancing?)

Beginnings come slowly—
Tortoise-shelled, but open
As we who hold them
Will make them unfold.

Treasure this time
That is ours to tell
As it spills
Brown and golden
Molding our moments
And our selves.

The vicious cycles of hatred are sometimes broken
By quiet people refusing to pass-on pain,
The glorious circles of love are constantly welded
By quiet people daring to clasp hands,
And the strongest creative act in the bravest person
Is to gently love.

A kind of royal demeanor
Becomes her sensitivity
As she contemplates the wood inlays,

When all is said and all is done
What is the truth about the sun?
And if she flies away each night
Who tells her when the time is right
To come and smile for one day more?
(I think she tip-toes out the door
So no one ever hears her come).
Is that the truth about the sun?

Misted
Our moons turn
Silver-tipped
And testing
Us.

And the rest,
The star
We never see,
Apart from Reasons

So questions
Curl about
The Center
In swirls
Of restlessness.

Follows us—
Still
And certain,
Fixed
In flux.
